Web Development Case Study:

Chat App November 2022

- An app that can be easily accessed: the only requirement once the app is downloaded and opened is to enter a username and access the chat. The user can then exchange messages, images and their location with other users.
- The approach started with the creation of a user persona and a user flow which identified who will most likely use the application and what would be the steps the user will take to make use of the application.
- This chat app was the final project for my full-stack web development bootcamp. Besides all difficulties, I realized how I grew in handling problems and solving bugs independently. I improved in figuring out what search terms to use when trying to find an answer with Google. I got a solid grasp of when it might help to temporary set a console.log() to know what's going on.
